EVENING CRITIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

WASHINGTON, D. U. Entered at the Post Office in Washington as second class matter.

Monday, May 29, 1882.

LIEUTENANT DANENHOWER will arrive at home on Thursday, thus finishing the most perilous circumnavigation of the globe ever made. He returns covered with henor that adds new lustre to the already high name achieved by the officers of the American Navy.

WE remark for the benefit of the Baltimore Day that THE CRITIC does not in-dulge in "withering sarcasm;" but that it is great on solid bed-rock truth. There are other papers besides the Day which are annoyed at having the plain truth, let alone solid bed-rock truth, thrust at them.

THERE is continual inquiry among the mechanics and workingmen in the employ ment of the United States, why Attorney General Brewster does not report on the question submitted to him by President Arthur, as to the constitutionality of the eight-hour law. The workers are afraid that smoothing his ruffles occupies too much of the Attorney-General's time.

To-Monnow is the day set apart for commemorating the dead who fell in de-fense of the integrity of the Union. All over this land, from centre to circumfer-ence, are graves where the known and the unknown, alike brave and devoted, "sleep the sleep that knows no waking" because of their devotion to the cause of liberty. It is a beautiful custom that sets apart a day when these myriad graves shall be decorated with flowers, the poetic offspring of mother earth, from which we all came and to which the dead have returned. It should be observed, not to keep alive memories of the terrible war, when brother fought with brother, but as a tribute to the gallant dead and an incentive to the living to be always ready when duty calls, even if its pathway leads to the grave.

Why Gladstone Fails.

The history of English rule in Ireland, eventful as it has been for more than three centuries, was never so interesting and certainly never appealed to the common sens and feeling of the world at large as at this moment. On the surface the existing situation is not altogether dissimilar to frequent other situations in the past, when the efforts of Irishmen for the betterment of their political condition have disturbed the current of British events. In general, we hear now the same passionate appeals of Irish eloquence and see the same strong struggling of Irish spirit on the one hand, met by the same phlegmatic English cyni-cism and the same cool English brute force on the other, that have always character ized the contentions of the two peoples.

The new policy of the English Ministry has now progressed far enough to make it clear to every discerning mind that in such of his measures as are calculated to be of actual benefit to Ireland, Mr. Gladstone is not sustained by English public opinion, while those in which he is sustained by English public opinion are not calculated to be of actual benefit to Ireland. It is observed now as heretofore that, however widely or bitterly Englishmen may diffe on any other class of subjects, they are a unit on all questions of policy affecting Ireland. We do not speak now of the doc-trine of Irish independence or separation from the United Kingdom—which the Eng-lish themselves describe by the very convenient term "secession"—but of the class of dectrines, such as Home Rule and Reform of the Land Tenure, which are based upon a primary admission of the integrity of the Union or United Kingdom. Much as has been heard of late about English Radicalism, or Republicanism, as represented by exponents like Sir Charles Dilke, or even the more violent Bradlaugh, it does not require close scrutiny of the situation to discover that there is a vast disproportion of noise to meaning in the movement, and that after all no serious inroad has been made upon the mass of tradition, precedent and custom, which is termed the British Constitution." The mobs of the great manufacturing centres are unruly and turbulent, as they always have been; but the real genius of the English people is still the stolidest type of conservatism, and the actual ruling forces of public opinion are still the blindest reverence for ancient forms and the most dutiful deference to time-honored privileges. The Queen is to an Englishman's politics what the image of the Blessed Virgin is to a Spaniard's religion, the visible symbol of the purity of his faith, while a landed aristocracy is to the former what the priesthood is to the latter, the practical agency of the plan in-

Thus the existing system of Land Tenure in Great Britain is an inseparable part, not only of the social, but of the political structure, and every reflecting Englishman realizes that any scheme for the partition of the vast catales upon which the aris-tocracy is based is a blow simed at the centre of the British Government, and thereby necessarily the beginning of the end of everything that he has been taught to revere in society and of everything that he has been educated to consider Indispensable to sound government. The fact that the land does not now represent the chief property value of the country, or that its tillage has become a subordinate indus-try through the competition of new agricultural developments eisewhere does not alter the social or political importance of its possession. Rent-rolls may diminish and estates depreciate in money value; old seats may pass into the hands of plebeian tradesmen or untitled factor ddenly grown rich; but for all that, title in fee simple to the soil still remains the tone to political pow r.

This feature of British institutions is common slike to all three members of the United Kingdom, and therefore the argu-ment in favor of its overthrow as to any part applies equally to the whole. If there is good reason why the Ministry should assume the burden of the arrears of Irish farmers this year, the landlords of of Irah farmers this year, the landlords of England and Scotland do not need much windom to foresse that there will be good reason for application of the principle to the arrears of English and Scotch farmers next year. The same logic applies to the question of passant proprietary. In short, no system can be devised for the relief of the Irish masses that will not be equally applicable to the relief of the English and Scotch marses whenever they may demand it; and they will do that soon enough when once a successful example has been

It is this impossibility of doing anything for the Irish that will not, sooner or later, have to be done for the English populace, that stays the hands and checks the aspira-tions of the numerous Liberal statesmen, who, belonging to the ruling class and depending upon that fact for their consequence, find it much easier to utter humanitarian theories that please the car than to adopt revolutionary practices which cannot but end in the destruction of the class system itself. This is the real secret of the difficulty that English statesmen have to encounter in deal-ing with Irish problems. And until a school of English statesmen is developed able and willing to declare and maintain a generic antagonism to the whole existing fabric, in England and Scotland as well as in Ireland, no substantial progress toward solution need be lioped for. That Gladstone, Hartington & Company are not equal to such an emergency is evident enough. The result for the present, therefore, must be another truce like all the rest that have been patched up in the past, by the terms of which England will gain a respite from her worry and Ireland a breathing spell from her woes with a mental reservation on each side that the evil day is only postponed for a season and that probably brief. After all, the readiest, if not the only, solution of the trouble lies within the power of the individual Irish-man, and consists in taking the shortest route to the United States.

The Morey Letter Mystery.

The Morcy Letter Mystery.

Washington Cor. Baltimore American.

Mr. John I. Davenport has been in Washington for about two weeks, during which time he has made several visits to Baltimore in connection with the Morcy letter forgery.

James A. Birmingham, a detective in the employment of the Baltimore & Ohio Baltroad, and one Richard Ryan, an employed in the rolling-mill of that road-both stationed at Cumberland—have met Mr. Davenport in Baltimore, and have there made full confession and statement of their connection with the making of the affidavit to which the signature of Robert Lindsay was forged, and of the sending of one James O'Brien to New York under the name of Robert Lindsay, and who is now confined in the State prisonat Sing Sing under a sentence of eight years, for perjury, in connection therewith; that said confessions detail the employment of each of said parties by Wm. M. Frice, at that time chairman of the Democratic National tickst. They also set forth the times, places and circumstances under which their various interviews with said Price were cratic National ticket. They also set forth the limos, piaces and circumstances under which their various literviews with said Frice were had, the amounts received in payment thereof, and all subsequent interviews and payments made by said Frice to purchast their selection regard to said matter. It is rumored that the next move in this connection will be thringing of Frice to Washington as a witness, or a defendant, in the matter of his connection with the affair, in a criminal trial, which, it is learned, can be brought under the statutes governing the District of Columbia, the party who made the final published copy of the Morey letter being, it is believed, a resident of the District at the time.

They Might Have Been Burbridge and Joe Blackburn.

Detroit Free Press.

On Sunday at Montgomery we were talking about duels, and when the names of several parties who had gone out in past years to eatisfy their honor were mentioned, the judge knocked the ashes off his cigar and said: "Gentlemen, it may be mentioned right here that I have been there myself." "Were you challenged?" "I was. It was over in South Carollina, and I called a man a liar. He sent me a challenge and I selected swords as the weapons. We met at 7 o'clock the next morning. It was just such a morning as this—bright, beautiful and full of life." "And how did you feel?" "Very queer. I shall never forget my sensations as I saw myrival, and he seemed to be as visibly affected. We couldn't either of us say a word." "Was it in agrows?" "Oh, no: it was at the depot." "The depot why, you didn't fight at the depot, did you!" "Well, no. The morning express trains passed there at 7 and he took one and I the other."
